

Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

		Response Percent	Response Count
No I can't see I would ever marry a non-Christian		57.2%	1,442
I can't see any problem with marrying a non-Christian		4.9%	124
I might but they would need to be sympathetic to my faith		30.1%	758
I might, because I do not want to remain single and where I am there aren't many Christians available		6.3%	159
I have no wish or expectation to be married		1.5%	37
	Any additional comments?		436
		answered question	2,520
		skipped question	649

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

1	I feel like the lack of christians leaves women in a tricky situation - how long do I wait for God to bring the christian man of my dreams? That will lessen the chances of me having a child etc.	Sep 30, 2012 7:21 AM
2	Ideally, I'd only want to marry someone who shares my faith but I do know of many couples/family which are a Christian/non-Christian mix and they seem to function ok.	Sep 27, 2012 11:52 AM
3	I believe that we should not be unevenly yolked however i have been married twice both professed to be Christian. My first marriage was not consumated and my second husband had a n affair and left. I have just dated a non Chrstian who attended an Alpha course he treated me better than anyone ive been with. He has not made a profession so i cant allow it to go any further, but it makes you question where all the real Christian men are. The church needs to teach men how to be real men and real biblical teaching about what it means to be a follower of Christ. To teach them how to love women and to stay away from the evils of this world.	Sep 24, 2012 2:54 PM
4	I was married to a Christian, so once when my view would be never to marry a non-Christian has changed. I dated a non-Christian who was symaphetic to my faith - a happier relationship than my marriage, although this relationship only lasted a few years.	Sep 22, 2012 9:17 AM
5	I did this before I would strongly advise against it unless the person is sympathetic and respectful of your choice. Praying together is better. This is a deal breaker	Sep 22, 2012 3:33 AM
6	I find it hard to believe that doing so would be part of God's will for my life. I tried living (a long way) outside his will for about twenty years - I have no wish ever to go there again!	Sep 21, 2012 9:12 AM
7	I think you should marry for love not because of what religion they follow. Ideally I would like to marry a Christian. I have dated and chatted online to both non-Christians and Christians and have found some Christian lads to be quite judgmental which puts me off them a bit. I think you can have a happy marriage to a non-christian if he is understanding of your views.	Sep 20, 2012 9:54 AM
8	I would want God to save them through His grace quickly if I did start seeing a non-christian woman.	Sep 19, 2012 9:12 AM
9	I wouldn't marry a christian. They obviously have something missing in their life	Sep 18, 2012 8:13 AM
10	I've watched several friends stop waiting and marry non-Christians. They seem happy with their choice and it makes it harder for me to stick to what I believe is right, particularly when non-Christian guys ask me to go on a date.	Sep 17, 2012 3:25 PM
11	I don't think so, but love is a very strong emotion so I cant say no for sure, depends on so many things.	Sep 17, 2012 8:48 AM
12	But I'm not sure if I'm still single in 5 years time that I will still be of this view. I don't want to be single forever and opportunities to meet new people, christian or not, seem to reduce every year.	Sep 16, 2012 12:16 PM
13	as above BUT i would ideally want to marry a christian:/	Sep 15, 2012 4:09 AM
14	As mentioned previously, I don't think I could possibly marry someone with whom I could not share and be strengthened in the most important part of	Sep 14, 2012 12:28 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

	myself. Jesus is absolutely everything - how could I be with someone who didn't understand this? How could my husband accept that I did not love him as much as Jesus, whom my husband would not even acknowledge was there?
15	I don't believe marriage to be possible for me. If it were, I'd only marry a non-Christian if I'd clear signs from God that he wished me to and I loved the person very deeply.	Sep 13, 2012 7:31 PM
16	thats how i ended up in the mess....	Sep 12, 2012 3:33 PM
17	i married someone who pretended to be a christian just to get me to marry him .ive dated unbelievers and really dont recommend it ,it never works out	Sep 10, 2012 6:56 AM
18	I nearly did and it almost cost me my faith, and to avoid damaging my faith meant my relationship suffered and I lost it. So never again, it has to be a Christian.	Sep 8, 2012 6:47 PM
19	I would be going against the will of God.	Sep 7, 2012 4:34 PM
20	I was married to a non-Christian for many years and now i am divorced. I would not want to go through that again.	Sep 7, 2012 1:07 PM
21	only if it was what God wanted.	Sep 5, 2012 1:33 PM
22	even when I'm tempted to marry a non Christian, it always comes down to the fact that I wouldn't be able to share the most important part of my life with them so can't see myself ever marrying someone without same faith. Would rather be single, however hard that is	Sep 5, 2012 10:44 AM
23	Marrying a non-Christian should be a no-no always!	Sep 4, 2012 3:47 PM
24	I thought I would never go out with a non-Christian, until I fell in love with one. We split up because he didn't want kids, but if he had asked me to marry him I would have said yes. I'm not sure whether the guilt feelings and/or doubts would have kicked in before I made it down the aisle.	Sep 4, 2012 3:03 PM
25	Would need to be v clear from God	Sep 3, 2012 8:03 AM
26	i would prefer to marry a christian but i would rather marry a non-christian than be alone	Sep 1, 2012 5:00 PM
27	This has been tested - I definitely want to share Jesus as part of a relationship	Sep 1, 2012 3:23 PM
28	My previous partner was a non-Christian, and although I would have married him despite this, I do feel since we separated that it may have caused more problems in the future had we stayed together.	Sep 1, 2012 1:10 PM
29	My ex-husband was a non christian when we met and has since become a christian, so thats a positive. At my age now, I am not so willing to take that risk. I need to be singing from the same 'song book'	Aug 30, 2012 12:14 PM
30	I was married to a non-christian an I never want to be again.	Aug 29, 2012 12:16 PM
31	Perhaps I would change with age. i.e. if someone enabled me to grow in my faith and encouraged me even though he was not a Christian.	Aug 29, 2012 12:16 PM
32	I was married to a non-Christian.	Aug 29, 2012 11:54 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

33	As long as my children are brought up within my faith I don't see a problem with marrying a non Christian.	Aug 29, 2012 2:24 AM
34	If you can't share your faith, which provides the base of your entire lifestyle then what can you share?	Aug 28, 2012 4:54 PM
35	I was married to a non-Christian and he was not sympathetic to my faith, but even if he had been it would still have been hard not being able to share my experience of Jesus, so I would not want to do that again and I believe the Bible also makes it quite clear that it is not helpful.	Aug 28, 2012 10:12 AM
36	I used to be very strongly the first option, but have met 1 or 2 very nice non-Christian men who have got me to be less sure!	Aug 27, 2012 11:08 AM
37	I wouldn't marry a non-christian unless I heard the audible voice of God. Joke.	Aug 26, 2012 12:00 PM
38	Would onlt marry a non-Christian if I believed they would become a Christian and felt that God was saying they were right for me and other people confirmed that	Aug 26, 2012 3:39 AM
39	I would like to think this, but have never been tempted either way.	Aug 25, 2012 2:37 AM
40	I would love a Christian husband, but there are far more Christian women that men and I have the baggage of kids, I hope I don't have to compromise, but there may come a point in time where after years of searching I might marry someone who isn't a christian but accepts my faith- I hope this doesn't happen.	Aug 24, 2012 8:29 AM
41	Now less on principle rather that my faith is so much part of me that I would not be able to share significant things or discuss things in so much depth without having a christian partner	Aug 23, 2012 4:04 PM
42	We would be speaking different languages right from the start and it wouldn't be easy for either of us.	Aug 23, 2012 8:33 AM
43	Non-Christians seem less judgemental to be honest but believe it would be dis-honouring to God if I dated outside the faith.	Aug 22, 2012 3:46 PM
44	I think it would be possible to marry someone of another faith, e.g. Muslim. I find I have more in common with Asian Muslim friends than with White British people who have no real faith.	Aug 22, 2012 3:22 PM
45	Having a non-christian family I know how hard it is to share my life with people who don't believe and so I would never marry anyone who wasn't Christian.	Aug 20, 2012 11:37 AM
46	Like I said, God has brought me through inner healing - specifically for problems with sexual identity. Only orthodox Christianity was able to help me gain a real, sane picture of the world in this respect. I have absolutely never wanted to marry a non-Christian. I believe very much in 'the power of a praying husband'. I also have no intention of bringing children into the world who will experience a spiritual divide between their parents. I am absolutely unwilling to be silenced spiritually.	Aug 12, 2012 10:42 AM
47	i had to give up a relationship with a non christian even tho he and i were fantasitcally compatible and very in love... because of the unease i felt at him not being a christian. Sacrifice and suffering path for God... i really hope	Aug 9, 2012 7:03 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

	i have done the right thing!
48	all of my relationships have been with non-christian's. though i dont think there was anything wrong with that i think it may have always been an issue for me. it really matters to me.	Aug 8, 2012 7:50 AM
49	I have thought that I would, I don't personally have an issue with it but I would only do so if I was in love with them & knew we were right for each other, not because I didn't want to be alone so I'll settle for 2nd best	Aug 7, 2012 5:42 PM
50	I have tried dated non Christian before, i can hundred percent gurantee it dragged my faith down the spiral.	Aug 7, 2012 3:09 PM
51	Been there,done that, learnt the hard way.	Aug 5, 2012 12:34 PM
52	but then again, what if I don't find a Christian man?!	Aug 3, 2012 10:47 AM
53	I definitely do not want to marry a non christian but this is a huge sacrifice as I have now been single for 5 years and reallly want to be married and have children	Aug 1, 2012 4:15 PM
54	it would cause too many complications It might change the way I live my life	Aug 1, 2012 1:19 PM
55	i am unsure of this???	Jul 31, 2012 3:09 PM
56	I guess also I have to be open minded to other person or if they have a different religion.	Jul 31, 2012 10:03 AM
57	My ex lost his faith and he began to condemn mine. Wouldn't find it easy to trust a non believer	Jul 31, 2012 4:27 AM
58	be single again after divorce is hard enough but continued rejection from christians or lack of interest hardly inspires me	Jul 30, 2012 4:44 PM
59	My belief is that the ideal union is where both share faith especially as you can share everything before God.	Jul 30, 2012 1:42 PM
60	However if God says so then i would,,, because i know he would have a plan to change that individual	Jul 29, 2012 10:04 AM
61	Biblical command and practical common sense to share same faith/interests/ideas/friends	Jul 29, 2012 9:24 AM
62	Have met some lovely caring men along the way but they did not share my faith and conversely some Christian men who shared my faith but who I did not love - If you have integrity and remain faithful to yourself/God you are left waiting, lonely and completely unfulfilled as a woman if not a Christian	Jul 29, 2012 2:37 AM
63	None of the above	Jul 27, 2012 6:32 AM
64	I would need them to understand my faith and not ridicule it and i would also see it as a witness oportunity	Jul 23, 2012 5:00 PM
65	Usually, non-christian men are a lot more pro-active in their approach to being with women. It often seems that the church has produced a lot of spineless men who are terrified of approaching women. They will often tell the woman's friends that they like her, but rarely speak to the woman directly themselves. This is why non-christian men are often a lot more attractive to	Jul 22, 2012 2:39 AM me, however, long term I want someone who I can pray with and grow in faith and love.

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

66	I have learned from this mistake in the past and would not ever do it again.	Jul 20, 2012 4:14 AM
67	I've been in a relationship with a man who wasn't really sure of his faith or living his life for God and he had loads of issues. For me I want a man who is committed to God and His church so we can grow together in faith.	Jul 17, 2012 2:02 PM
68	It's an option I would consider, but I would much rather marry someone who can share my faith at a similar level and depth of intensity that I practice it.	Jul 16, 2012 5:13 PM
69	ive found that non christian relationships often come under attack when im working for god more often than relationships with another christian. i feel its important for everyones safety and wellbeing	Jul 16, 2012 11:19 AM
70	god's word tells us not to be unequally yoked	Jul 16, 2012 10:24 AM
71	I think it would be very difficult dating a non christain as they expect more. Dating Christian understand the bounderies that we should practice as christians when dating. Would not date a non christian as somewhere down the line they might get fed up waiting or not want to marry so then leave the relationship. Not willing to get burnt for that.	Jul 14, 2012 1:52 PM
72	Some dedicated christian men even on CC do not want to consider partners who have never lost their previous spouses through death, so it appears that women like me, although we are dedicated to the things of God, cannot find a seriously prayerful spouse here. Therefore I have had to register my profile elsewhere, and start to consider the possibility of having a partner who may not be dedicated to the things of God	Jul 14, 2012 9:08 AM
73	Difficult question: I can't say hand-on-heart I would never marry a non-Christian but they would need to live by Christian values.	Jul 14, 2012 8:13 AM
74	Been there done that and got the divorce! Not for me :/	Jul 14, 2012 2:29 AM
75	As I have been strongly taught that God (through Paul) considers this to be a no go area.	Jul 13, 2012 6:17 AM
76	I don't think I actually would, but I have dated non-Christians and desperately prayed for them to have their eyes opened to faith. Not worked so far. Still praying for one!	Jul 13, 2012 12:35 AM
77	I was married to a non-Christian and there was constant conflict in the relationship. I would rather stay single than marry a non-Christian again.	Jul 12, 2012 9:31 PM
78	i want to marry a christian man but i feel like i'm saying i want to win the lottery - neither is very likely now I am 40	Jul 12, 2012 1:52 PM
79	I realise that this is unbiblical and would probably lead to me leaving the church	Jul 12, 2012 1:36 PM
80	It's difficult I have faith to believe God will provide I'd hate to settle although who knows?	Jul 12, 2012 9:09 AM
81	2 Corinthians chapter 6 vs 14 "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?"	Jul 12, 2012 9:04 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

82	it's great to worship and praise together w/ my special one	Jul 12, 2012 3:56 AM
83	Having been married to a non christian.Believe my faith was part of the reason my marriage failed as I spent alot of time at church	Jul 11, 2012 2:15 PM
84	HAVING LIVED OUTSIDE OF GOD'S BOUNDARIES IN THE PAST I CATEGORICALLY FEEL THAT MARRYING ANYONE OTHER THAN A CHRISTIAN AT THIS STAGE IN MY LIFE WOULD BE DETRIMENTAL TO MY FUTURE	Jul 10, 2012 8:57 AM
85	I made the mistake of marrying a non Christian first time round as there was no one else and it was a mistake but I do have 2 lovely children who are worth more than all the pain both marked and now single	Jul 9, 2012 2:49 PM
86	After two failed marriages, one to a Christian, and one to someone who claimed to be, there is no way I'd entertain marriage with anyone who didn't share my beliefs. Since there are a wide variety of Christian beliefs also, this makes the whole concept difficult.	Jul 9, 2012 3:49 AM
87	If they have a Christian background and are not anti-God then that would be a significant help.	Jul 8, 2012 9:50 AM
88	I DON'T SEE ANY PROBLEM WITH MARRYING A NON CHRISTIAN IF SHE WOULD JOIN ME IN MY CHURCH	Jul 8, 2012 6:11 AM
89	I would like to marry but I feel I am too old and set in my ways	Jul 8, 2012 1:30 AM
90	I wouldn't even go on a date with a non christian, because	Jul 7, 2012 2:12 PM
91	i would try hard not to though	Jul 7, 2012 12:34 PM
92	i often think where are they	Jul 6, 2012 4:00 PM
93	If I marry, I need to be with someone who has a strong Faith so that we can develop together - my Parents divorce showed what happens when one believes and the other doesn't.	Jul 6, 2012 3:38 PM
94	I struggle with marrying a non-Christian. The person would have to be very open to my faith and that's not realistic. If they were so open they would also become a Christian. I sometimes feel pulled two directions - desiring a family and wanting someone close I can share my faith with and bringing children up in Christian faith.	Jul 6, 2012 2:51 AM
95	i did and i regretted it. i hope i can be strong if theres a next time.	Jul 4, 2012 5:39 PM
96	As my faith is important to me and integral to who I am I do not think that I could contemplate being with anyone who isn't sympathetic to my faith as I believe that it would lead to disagreements	Jul 4, 2012 12:15 PM
97	At 55 I doubt whether I will marry and it is a source of sadness and regret that I spent time on certain church activities, when I could have been looking for a partner.	Jul 4, 2012 9:26 AM
98	I am praying that God will open a door so I can meet my Christian soulmate	Jul 4, 2012 8:37 AM
99	But this choice gets harder as I get older.	Jul 3, 2012 4:33 PM
100	would like to think i would not make the mistake of marrying a non-christian	Jul 3, 2012 1:29 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

	again, as i am now divorced and his antagonism towards my faith played a big part in this. but cannot say i will NEVER marry a non-christian because i dont know what God intends for me.
101	my faith is the most important part of my life, if i got married i would want my husband to have his faith as his number one priority also	Jul 3, 2012 12:49 PM
102	We wouldn't be walking the same path or have the same goals	Jul 3, 2012 10:38 AM
103	but I have done in the past!	Jul 3, 2012 10:21 AM
104	personally I think you can be happy married to a non-christian but I don't think it is God's best. It all depends on how important your relationship with God is to you. I would find it extremely difficult not to be able to share that vital part of my life with someone I love.	Jul 3, 2012 9:22 AM
105	I broke up with my long term non christian boyfriend who i was completely in love with because i realised i couldn't marry him. a year and a half on i still have strong feelings for him but would not get abck with him as the Bible explicitly tells us not to marry them. such a painful experience that i have vowed never to date a non christian again!	Jul 3, 2012 7:47 AM
106	been there done that. i do not want to be in the position of trying to get somebody to enjoy the things i enjoy i want it to be natural to them	Jul 3, 2012 3:41 AM
107	I have dated non Christians in the past but my faith has always been something I won't compromise on.	Jul 3, 2012 1:52 AM
108	I could not be with someone who did not want to know the God I love soo much, that just would not work.	Jul 2, 2012 2:30 PM
109	It wouldn't be my first choice but rather that than a lonley future	Jul 2, 2012 2:15 PM
110	I would be under very severe pressure from church if I did, and would probably have to change churches. (However, I would be extremely unlikely to in any case).	Jul 2, 2012 2:04 PM
111	I feel people know you are a Christian by how one behaves	Jul 2, 2012 1:54 PM
112	I used to be very black and white about marrying a christian - which I did - and it backfired horribly - so now I don't know	Jul 2, 2012 1:34 PM
113	I struggle with this one. As I get older it gets more difficult unless he is over 10 years older than me, whic doesn't appeal. I have also been strongly attracted to non-Christians and know several women in my church with a strong faith who are also happily married to someone who is not a Christian. Yet my closest friends consider it wrong to even consider marrying one. But what if they are everything I would want, as opposed to a Christian who turns out to be awful to/for me? So confusing!!	Jul 2, 2012 12:56 PM
114	It says it all in 2 Corinthians 6:14...we have a choice and free Will...but God gives loving Abba Father instruction so we don't get hurt in unessary ways. The Bible tells us in this Scripture not to marry an unbeliever because it is too easy for that person to to tempt us away from our faith, And if we are marrying another believer we must ensure we are marrying for the right reasons.	Jul 2, 2012 12:56 PM
115	My world view is so strongly rooted in my faith that I can't see I would be	Jul 2, 2012 12:53 PM able to have a satisfying depth of relationship with someone who did not share that world view.

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

116	Marriage is a sharing of spirit as well as body and soul!	Jul 2, 2012 12:13 PM
117	mutual respect and interest in each others religion would be a must	Jul 2, 2012 11:44 AM
118	The bible clearly forbids this.	Jul 2, 2012 10:45 AM
119	I really struggled to answer this questions. There Christians who believe in God, may pray etc but are not active in their churches, and hungry to grow, and then there are those that are. I think the first option should be split to allow for these two groups.	Jul 2, 2012 9:50 AM
120	I would NEVER marry a non christian!	Jul 1, 2012 4:20 PM
121	I became a Christian while living with a non-Christian, who remained a non-Christian once we were married. I would be very careful about choosing to remarry if the other person was not at least sympathetic to my faith journey - my late husband often found it a challenge.	Jul 1, 2012 9:26 AM
122	my last husband was a muslim	Jun 28, 2012 3:49 PM
123	My faith is very important to me and I was previously married to someone who lost his faith. This has made me see that I don't just want but need my partner to be as committed to his relationship with God as he is to me. I believe that men should be the priests of the house. One thing I miss is praying and fellowshiping with my partner- I would expect this from any relationship I entered	Jun 28, 2012 1:12 PM
124	I would like to think that I'll never marry a non-Christian, however the lack of Godly (and manly) Christian men may tempt me to settle for someone who is only marginally Christian - I hope this doesn't happen!	Jun 26, 2012 1:38 PM
125	Ideally, I would like to marry a Christian. My parents are non-Christians and divorced so although Christian marriages aren't perfect, I feel it would start off on a better footing.	Jun 26, 2012 12:46 PM
126	I really hope I wouldn't. This one requires discipline, and good accountability with friends and mentors who you give permission to speak wisely into your life. Not easy for people who have limited contact with Christian guys.	Jun 26, 2012 12:13 PM
127	It does not work how can 2 walk together unless they agree	Jun 26, 2012 10:43 AM
128	I wont marry a person opposed to Christianity or of a different faith. They will need to believe in Jesus but dont have to be of the same level of faith as long as they are progress in their journey of faith	Jun 25, 2012 1:44 PM
129	i would marry ANY - reasonably attractive woman - who could love and be loved in return - whatever her faith - or non faith.	Jun 24, 2012 4:37 PM
130	My parents are my role models - my dad is a Christian and my mum is not. They'll have been married 30 years next March.	Jun 23, 2012 4:19 PM
131	in the past i have not always felt this way but now think it is best for me	Jun 23, 2012 2:44 PM
132	I'd rather be alone for the rest of my life than marry a non-Christian. My faith is the most important aspect of my life and I would want to share it with	Jun 23, 2012 10:40 AM anyone I spent my life with.

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

133	comments noted before!	Jun 23, 2012 7:53 AM
134	We should never marry non-christians because it can not be right, the other person would not understand me	Jun 23, 2012 3:33 AM
135	being sympathetic to faith also applies!	Jun 22, 2012 4:15 PM
136	Right now, I am looking to marry a christian. I was going out with a non-christian 10 years ago and I felt God spoke to me in answer to a prayer, telling me to go out with a christian. I was 30, and I am now nearly 40. It is a constant battle to remain faithful to this instruction, as time goes on I wonder when and who I will meet. Some christian friends of mine have married non-christians and I think that works for them, but as I have heard directly from god (or at least I hope so!) I feel I need to stay faithful to this. It is not easy, especially as child-bearing years slip by, especially having given up a very loving relationship 10 years ago. I can only assume that god has something better planned.	Jun 22, 2012 3:49 PM
137	I think they would need to be strongly sympathetic almost to the point of being a convinced believer in God but not yet having a personal relationship through faith in Christ.	Jun 22, 2012 2:56 PM
138	i really hope i don't have to compromise like that as I love the idea of a partner that helps build up your faith but it seems hard to meet...plus there is the added problem that if you meet someone at church and things go wrong it could make it very hard for either of you to continue to go to that church...i wouldn't want to do that to someone.	Jun 22, 2012 11:33 AM
139	Was married to a non christian and it did not work out.	Jun 22, 2012 9:51 AM
140	I have been married to a non christian and did not realise in my early twenties that this would be such a problem	Jun 22, 2012 8:53 AM
141	I might be tempted to out of desperation.	Jun 22, 2012 7:56 AM
142	But the thought has crossed my mind as there aren't many single Christians where I live	Jun 22, 2012 6:38 AM
143	Even though I can't see myself marrying a non-Christian, being the age I am now and still single, I have empathy for those around me who have ended up dating non-Christians. Sometimes its hard to keep away from admirers who might be unsuitable when your body clock is ticking and you long for intimacy!	Jun 21, 2012 3:54 PM
144	I can't see why any Christian would want to compromise their faith, go against God's word and marry a non-Christian, as both people would have different priorities - the Christian's focus would be to worship and put God as their focus; whereas the non-Christian has a different God at the centre of their life.	Jun 21, 2012 9:55 AM
145	By choice I would not marry outside my faith but good guys are scarce	Jun 21, 2012 5:48 AM
146	Difficult though as nonchristians will note that you look attractive, come and chat etc but Christian men don't. do not want to marry nonchristian	Jun 21, 2012 4:59 AM
147	It's very unlikely I'd marry a non Christian, afterall, I could have done that	Jun 20, 2012 11:04 PM already.

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

148	Whether they are a christian or not doesn't really affect my feelings, If i'm in love. i'm in love	Jun 20, 2012 4:13 PM
149	God has really challenged me with this. I believe it is a compromise and I am not prepared to do this. My faith and christian based work is too important	Jun 20, 2012 3:36 PM
150	I would rather marry a Christian but sometimes you can help who you fall for. also there are little or no christians in my area! and no social get togethers that you can meet any!	Jun 20, 2012 3:05 PM
151	Do find some christians as boyfirends have severely wobbled my faith by not sharing my values. so even a 'christian' and a church-goer is not necessarily suitable	Jun 20, 2012 2:30 PM
152	As a significant amount of my time is spent serving the church, I don't see that having a non Christian partner would be beneficial. If anything I think it would test my loyalty to the church.	Jun 20, 2012 1:39 PM
153	Unless I found myself in a situation where I felt God was at work	Jun 20, 2012 12:28 PM
154	I am married to a Christian - but he had been non-practising for a while....now he's practising again - and it was something we talked about very early on in our dating.	Jun 20, 2012 10:52 AM
155	In the past it would have been an absolute no. Now I might, though they would have to pursue me to begin with and I don't think that's very likely at my age! I would also be worried about their expectations of my sexual experience, as I don't really have any, and I would be concerned that they would leave me on that account in any case.	Jun 20, 2012 8:35 AM
156	I take the Biblical injunction not to be unequally yoked seriously.	Jun 20, 2012 8:34 AM
157	There is the fear of doing something that is going to make God angry and would keep me away from him	Jun 20, 2012 8:26 AM
158	i would marry a non-christian but they would have to be wholeheartedly accepting of my faith and allow me to maintian close friendships i have with other men. i also think it would be important for him to realise that a lot of the time god comes before most things .	Jun 20, 2012 6:16 AM
159	Have been engaged to nonchristian - couldn't go thru with marriage due to the major difference despite him being tolerant to my faith	Jun 20, 2012 5:33 AM
160	I see lots of single, childless, old women in my church and I don't want to end up that that!! Sounds horrible but thats how I feel and so do many other women but they are just too polite to say so.	Jun 20, 2012 4:55 AM
161	A good character , kindness and honesty are all important whether they come in a Christian wrapper or not !	Jun 20, 2012 3:28 AM
162	I married a non Christian and it didn't work out - we had different ways of thinking. He came to church for a while, joined Alpha and got confirmed but it didn't change things.	Jun 20, 2012 2:16 AM
163	Through me he would get to know the Lord, and to love and serve Jesus Christ. And to accept Him for his personal saviour.	Jun 19, 2012 3:10 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

164	Tonight I feel quite happy as I am but thank you for the opportunity to think through some of this stuff.	Jun 19, 2012 2:09 PM
165	This question is difficult since I do not want to marry a non-christian (having been out with non-christians, I know that it affects my faith) but I'm at a loss to see how God can possibly cater for all the single Christian women who want a Christian partner when there are not enough to go around!	Jun 19, 2012 1:08 PM
166	Better a partner who did not claim to be a Christian than one who claims he is but who does not live as one.	Jun 19, 2012 12:43 PM
167	I would be cautious of this but would not totally rule it out ideally I would like to marry a Christain. I would not marry anyone of a different faith	Jun 18, 2012 12:29 PM
168	The bible leaves no room for leeway on this issue.	Jun 17, 2012 5:19 PM
169	i would rather not having been in a relationship with a non christian previously	Jun 16, 2012 8:26 AM
170	I always remain hopeful that non christians will hear God one day	Jun 16, 2012 2:26 AM
171	They would have to be happy to bring children up in a Christian environment.	Jun 16, 2012 1:35 AM
172	Was married to a non Christian before & it never worked	Jun 16, 2012 1:35 AM
173	Meeting men who don't share my faith has caused me not to date certain men therefore I could not marry a non-Christian and make a life committment to him.	Jun 15, 2012 9:38 AM
174	This is a big struggle as there appear to be fewer men than women in the church	Jun 15, 2012 2:36 AM
175	because I no longer regard myself as a 'xian	Jun 14, 2012 3:07 AM
176	It is very harfd to find people who identify and understand aspects of myfaith which people outside myreligion do not consider or uphold,	Jun 13, 2012 2:09 PM
177	My dad was a non Christian when my mum married him so I can't completely rule this out. It didn't change her faith, but did change his- he is now a Christian. They are clearly meant to be together, I don't like the idea that had my mum followed the 'rules' this wouldn't have happened.	Jun 11, 2012 1:34 PM
178	I have been tempted and I have been in the situation where I could have. In the end, even though I was very tempted, I knew that ultimately, it wouldn't have worked. I do sometimes wonder whether I made the right decision, but....deep down I think I did.	Jun 11, 2012 1:13 PM
179	I think issues with being single apply to non-Christians too.	Jun 11, 2012 12:56 AM
180	been there, brought the t shirt, and it didnt wash well	Jun 9, 2012 4:08 AM
181	I stick to the choice I made here, but I worry that in time this might be something I am less sure about.	Jun 9, 2012 2:45 AM
182	I've not always been a Christian so I'm used to the non-Christian approach to dating. Non-Christian men seem a little more brave in asking me on dates. Christian men wait longer. Perhaps I'm also not the standard type of Christian woman and that may be reducing my chances of getting together	Jun 8, 2012 8:54 PM with a Christian.

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

183	I was married to a non-Christian and that caused major problems within the marriage. When we married my faith had lapsed.	Jun 8, 2012 1:26 AM
184	I married a church goer...and that was really not easy. I believe that it would be the best for me to marry a believer.	Jun 7, 2012 11:01 PM
185	ultimately i want to marry a christian ....but to accept singleness as something that will always be that way is hard....but i also recognise i may not meet a non christian who i click with either.	Jun 7, 2012 4:14 PM
186	To marry a non-Christian would be to be unequally yoked and it definitely would not work.	Jun 7, 2012 3:00 PM
187	I couldn't marry anyone who is a legalist however, I think Charismatics are wrong in their theology. I like Reformed.Born again types who are a bit Liberal... I like John MacArthur and Martin Lloyd Jones	Jun 7, 2012 2:58 PM
188	I feel that having a 'faith' is important but it may not be the same one, along with having similar values and morals and work ethic are very important.,	Jun 7, 2012 1:05 PM
189	My ex-husband was an atheist and it was very hard to communicate with him on certain issues. He was a very difficult person anyway but to marry again it would have to be with a Christian Man. I think it is a beautiful union and only true intimacy can be complete if both are Christian.	Jun 7, 2012 10:38 AM
190	But they would have to be sympathetic to my faith	Jun 7, 2012 5:12 AM
191	the million dollar question; if I met a fabulous man who did not exactly share my faith... and then even though they are a christian is is sympathetic to your own views? only God can see us through that maze	Jun 6, 2012 3:15 PM
192	I feel it is very important to be married to someone who shares your faith and beliefs and this means that you can share your whole life with them not just part of your life.	Jun 6, 2012 12:40 PM
193	I think this is very dependant on the person - their attitudes, views, outlook, journey. If someone was very interested in faith and actively moving forwards then I think it would be fine to pursue a relationship with them.	Jun 6, 2012 11:57 AM
194	This is purely for my situation. I've tried relationships with non-christians - all indicated that married life would be highly problematic. I'm not strong enough for it but I also can't see any problem with other Christians marrying non-Christians and know a few couples where it's really working.	Jun 6, 2012 11:39 AM
195	I would marry a non-Christian if I felt it was the Lords will	Jun 6, 2012 10:51 AM
196	my views have changed as i strongly felt in the past i only ever wanted to marry a christian but now it would purely depend on the person i got to know.	Jun 6, 2012 9:36 AM
197	I know that it probably isn't God's best for me. Unfortunately i have had very disappointing relatonships with christian men. My best and longest relationship was with a non-christian man.	Jun 6, 2012 5:24 AM
198	I sometimes question this but I feel strongly that as God commands equal yoke then I should only accept this even if I am keen to have a partner / get married.	Jun 6, 2012 5:19 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

199	This was my view before I met my husband	Jun 6, 2012 4:41 AM
200	Marriage is hard enough when you both believe in the same thing, let alone if you both share different views	Jun 6, 2012 3:45 AM
201	I tried dating a non Christian. She couldnt understand my faith. It led to complications. I believe God has a plan for me to have a Christian wife. I would like my daughter to have a Christian step mother.	Jun 6, 2012 12:01 AM
202	Im really unsure. I would used to have said... Has to be a Christian, but I doubt this more and more. I divorced a Christian man for cheating on me, I always feel ashamed of my divorce. Compared to that whether he is a Christian or not seems less significant. But in my heart of hearts I want a Christian, but then again is this be being nieve? This confused me alot and I battle with it.	Jun 5, 2012 11:29 PM
203	But maybe I would if they were willing to become a christian	Jun 5, 2012 3:52 PM
204	I would prefer to marry a Christian.	Jun 5, 2012 3:29 PM
205	There are no single Christian men my age in my church	Jun 5, 2012 2:52 PM
206	I pray that I won't, but I don't know how strong I will be in the future especially the older I get.	Jun 5, 2012 2:47 PM
207	I would rather marry a Christian but who knows what would happen if I fell in love with a non Christian - it would be a difficult decision	Jun 5, 2012 2:30 PM
208	This is hard to think about as a hyperthetical question. It wouldn't be easy but if I felt God was in it then I would trust him to help me through it.	Jun 5, 2012 1:22 PM
209	This is an ABSOLUTE!	Jun 5, 2012 1:21 PM
210	I was married to an agnostic .. who became more and more atheistic and left me for someone else. I feel if I was a better Christian, lived a better life, then I would have attracted him to Christianity, and the fact that he turned further and further away was my fault for being a bad (non-inspiring) Christian. Deepens sense of guilt and hopelessness	Jun 5, 2012 11:25 AM
211	I couldn't face the idea that the person I love would be going to Hell if they died.	Jun 5, 2012 11:11 AM
212	God would have to make it very clear that they would become a Christian during my marriage and they would need to be open to finding out more.	Jun 5, 2012 11:06 AM
213	Was married to a non-practising Muslim and do not want to repeat mistakes	Jun 5, 2012 10:55 AM
214	2 Corinthians ch 6 vs 14 Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?	Jun 5, 2012 10:39 AM
215	I have just ended a 2 year relationship with someone who is undecided about their faith. The issues of our differing approach to life due to our differing faith were too much to overcome. I think it is important for me to be with someone who shares my faith fully and can grow in this together.	Jun 5, 2012 10:34 AM
216	Only if God made it v clear this was a part if His plan.	Jun 5, 2012 5:28 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

217	I LOVED a non-Christian, I was Told if I were to Marry him, my dear mentor would stand up for me in the church and resist the Wedding. I walked away, often it still hurts. But at the same Time I want and still hold out for a CHRISTIAN MAN. There was NO SUPPORT or Understanding for the LOVE I felt, or Support for Praying him in/ getting alongside him/ or just Accepting Him as he was. My chance to have kids has now left me, and LIFE is SLIPPING BY. . . And I am WORRIED. I now face waiting til a Lady dies or a couple divorce as my only future means of finding a partner as everyone at THIS age is married who WANTS to Be, and inheriting someone else's kids - - So I am Thinking on this. Is this the life I want?? The man I LOVED is TILL not Married -- Shagging (pardon the word but that's how it is, in HIS situation) someone just cos he CAN. Not living with her -- Just playing along life's game as there's nothing else to Do. Yet, we could have had kids and made a GO of LIFE.	Jun 4, 2012 8:06 PM
218	My late husband was non christian	Jun 4, 2012 4:28 PM
219	to many complications involved with there ways of life and mine plus financial reasons.	Jun 4, 2012 12:18 PM
220	It depends exactly on the definition of 'christian'. I would probably want to marry somebody who has an outlook in which every individual is valued, and where goodness, fairness and honesty are prized as things to be encouraged, and where ambition and self-interest are never put above anything that is wrong. So in that sense, the person would be a christian (a follower of christ), regardless of their view on any of the doctrines of the various churches.	Jun 4, 2012 11:14 AM
221	NEVER NEVER NEVER NEVER NEVER NEVER!!!!!! 2 CORINTHIANS 6 V.14	Jun 3, 2012 1:14 PM
222	My late husband was not a Christian, but he supported me in my faith and activities.	Jun 3, 2012 12:57 PM
223	I want to add a comment on one of the questions on the previous page. I said that singleness has made me struggle with faith - but part of this is the very, very great plus in that it has made me dig far more deeply than I think I would have done had I married young. It has 'provoked' me to exploring faith far, far more - this is something I would not ever want to have lived without. I have some sympathy with the life of Religious, and of Roman Catholic priests, in what depths their vow of celibacy can bring - I have found it very useful to have a religious as my spiritual director. Far, FAR better than the average CofE family-oriented evangelical vicar!!!! Not much time, space, capacity, for mystic dimensions of faith in a busy household!	Jun 3, 2012 6:26 AM
224	I hope that you include civil partnership in the term married	Jun 3, 2012 5:43 AM
225	But if i change my mind in the future they would definently have to be christian	Jun 2, 2012 1:34 PM
226	I might but would rather not - but the numbers for christian single girls just don't add up - so currently wondering about dating someone who isn't christian	Jun 2, 2012 2:28 AM
227	A partnership should have God at the centre and have shared life vision and love for God. I cannot imagine compartmentalising my faith if the other person didn't love Jesus too it would be denying my true self. I think it would bring hardship and so I feel it would be better to be single.	Jun 2, 2012 1:53 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

228	However, it is not easy as there are so few young Christian male singles around!	Jun 1, 2012 11:04 AM
229	See previous comment elsewhere. I don't think I would, but then I've never been absolutely desperate.... Can't imagine that!	May 31, 2012 3:54 PM
230	I've dated a non-christian, and knew it wasn't right...	May 31, 2012 2:24 PM
231	I cant answer this I dont find christian men that much of a catch it depends on the man... after all they are men	May 31, 2012 2:03 PM
232	I do NOT wish to marry a non-Christian, but that doesn't mean I'm imune to tempting thoughts!	May 31, 2012 1:49 PM
233	Preferably I would like to marry a Christian, but if they hold Christian values and believe in God then that is good. I believe anyone can come to Christ at any point in time, so who am I to reject a potential suitor because he hasn't decided to become a Christian yet?	May 30, 2012 4:15 PM
234	I might be very tempted to though, because there seem to be few masculine ('wild at heart' / 'alpha male') Christian men around... too many are wimps	May 30, 2012 1:41 PM
235	I pray and ask God to guide me to the right person.	May 29, 2012 2:40 PM
236	As long as they respected my faith, that wouldn't make a difference, mutual respect can lead to a loving relationship	May 29, 2012 10:37 AM
237	As I get older I am starting to wonder if I will reconsider this position which I have held for 12 years as I start to wonder if chemistry and friendship is actually more important.	May 28, 2012 4:40 PM
238	opposing beliefs especially passionate,it would become a wedge.and would soon be looking on your site again	May 28, 2012 1:53 PM
239	I have seen many Christian ladies draged away from Jesus by a unsaved partner which was a lesson I lernt early on as a young cristian all those years ago. it also warns us that sarkness and light canot go together as unbelieving womaen are still living in darkness as when I became a christian i moved over into the light	May 28, 2012 4:38 AM
240	Having said this, I is difficult to know how stongly I could be tempting as I get older and if no Christian men show interest. I think is a kind and attractive non-Christian who was sympathetic to my faith came along I would find it hard.	May 28, 2012 3:15 AM
241	In my personal situation filling in this questionnaire has been very theraputic. Thank you.	May 26, 2012 2:26 PM
242	If my relationship with God is the most important thing in my life, I can't imagine how that fits with someone who does not believe the same!	May 26, 2012 3:35 AM
243	In my last relationship I was the weaker partner, even though he was a christian, if i didn't go along with his way of things he had a go at me, so i worry i'd be the weaker party in a relationship with a non christian - much as i'd hope to remain strong, it's not worth the risk	May 25, 2012 1:56 PM
244	It's a generalised question. It would depend on the person etc..	May 25, 2012 5:13 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

245	this is very difficult for me to answer as i have just come out of a non christian relationship so that now influences my thoughts on this.	May 25, 2012 4:25 AM
246	Although I've ticked the first statement, I've hit the reality as to why ladies do marry non-Christians. If it wasn't for my very CLOSE circle of Christian friends & family, I could have gone down this road.	May 25, 2012 3:55 AM
247	It's easy to say this hypothetically but if I met a nice non-Christian it may be hard to resist because of the lack of available Christians.	May 24, 2012 2:45 PM
248	I would like to think that I wouldn't but sometimes it seems a better alternative to singleness	May 23, 2012 3:47 PM
249	and number 3	May 23, 2012 11:27 AM
250	I've dated non christians in the past and there are expectations I will not meet, also they cannot understand my relationship with god.	May 22, 2012 11:43 PM
251	I find many Christian men can be unrealistic in their expectations of Christian women. They can potentially be more judgemental too - for example they see me as a single parent after a failed marriage - tarnished goods... Non-Christian men are more likely to see a creative professional single mum with a great kid, who was strong enough to leave an abusive alcoholic Christian husband. Which would appeal to you more?	May 22, 2012 2:27 PM
252	NEVER NEVER NEVER NEVER NEVER NEVER NEVER NEVER NEVER!!!!!! It deeply disturbs me that this question is here. Please would you insert a quotation from 2 Cor.6 v. 14-17 here. If people could read that while answering this question, it may help them to choose the right thing. The question as it stands may cause doubt and confusion. How would you feel if you were doing a survey written by Christians and a question said: "Are there any circumstances when you would steal?" with similar responses you have given?	May 22, 2012 2:11 PM
253	It is hard when there are more non-christians than christians that i meet day to day, and some have better morals. However i would like to think that i wouldn't marry a non-christian.	May 21, 2012 8:21 AM
254	I'm committed to remaining single if the Lord doesn't provide a committed Christian for me	May 21, 2012 6:41 AM
255	I cannot imagine living life with someone who doesn't have a faith in Jesus, and have their faith as the central focus of their life.	May 20, 2012 12:12 PM
256	After my previous experience of marriage with an abusive Christian man, it is very difficult to trust that the same thing would not happen again.	May 20, 2012 8:48 AM
257	It doesnt work if you marry a non christian. Their outlook on life is so different to yours.	May 20, 2012 8:33 AM
258	I'm not against it per se....but given my position in the church, I don't think it would be an option!	May 19, 2012 2:26 PM
259	I have done that before, it has been very painful. then I met someone again whom I liked very much but our differences would put our relationship in jeopardy so I had to leave and remember it short and beautiful. I think has to be a true believer with all the qualities would come with.	May 18, 2012 2:33 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

260	I know that marrying a non-Christian is not advisable - I can see that there are issues that could be challenging (eg bringing up children as believers or not?). However it seems unfair that my options are so restricted. I hope that I will not marry a non-Christian, but I wouldn't rule it out.	May 17, 2012 3:13 PM
261	This is a real challenge. They would need to be receptive at the outset but commit before marriage.	May 17, 2012 1:13 PM
262	From experience, I'd rather have a non-Christian who is honest about it, than one who pretends/lies about it to get approval.	May 17, 2012 1:12 PM
263	This is a really difficult one. I would like to marry a Christian as a I feel far away from God when dating non Christians, however I don't want to pass up good people and/or be on my own for the rest of my life.	May 17, 2012 12:35 PM
264	I sincerely hope I remain true to my reply. I get more attention from non-Christians, I only hope I am not led into temptation to be with someone who doesn't share my faith, however sympathetic they are	May 17, 2012 4:11 AM
265	i hate saying that cos i know God wants me to be with someone who shares my faith, but i really want a family and a husband to share life with, and i dont know if Gods on my side with this one, im so frightened to be alone forever, i dont want to but the way im feeling i may take actions the wrong way :(	May 16, 2012 2:26 PM
266	Most non Christians are more "Christ like" than the so called Christians. Since most of the so called christians i have met are not descent i might consider marrying a nonchristian if push comes to shove.	May 16, 2012 8:32 AM
267	I have learned and seen how marriages based on something other than faith can have problems if there is a change in circumstances (for example a change in the financial situation). I believe not that Christian couples don't have problems, but that they can overcome them through Jesus.	May 16, 2012 8:20 AM
268	I see some so called Christian dating sites where the majority of people , men particularly have no church affiliation. I want to scream out to vulnerable young girls to be careful and see such sites as disasters waiting to happen.	May 16, 2012 1:27 AM
269	a christian is an ideal but there are soooooo few about.	May 15, 2012 1:00 PM
270	change that many to ANY	May 15, 2012 5:06 AM
271	Having dated a non-christian and seen the effect it had on my own faith, I wouldn't want to go there again	May 15, 2012 4:28 AM
272	As a strong Christian, when I went to uni I thought I was strong enough to cope with a non Christian boyfriend! I totally wasn't and don't want to be in that same boat again!	May 14, 2012 3:27 PM
273	I believe faith is a centre of my life so want to be married to some one who shares this. That said, for every rule there is an exception that God uses for good.	May 14, 2012 3:23 PM
274	I believe in being equally yoked. And if a person doesnt get ny faith, they will never get me.	May 14, 2012 1:40 PM
275	I need someone who is thinking on the same wave length so to speak if I am renewing my mind and reaching for Gods ways in my life It would be difficult if not very hard trying to live with someone that is not living for others	May 14, 2012 1:16 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

	as well as themselves it wouldnt make for happiness between us.It would depend on the person and wether they may possibly come to faith through example .It would take time Prayer and patience Mostly A lot of love
276	gays cant marry	May 14, 2012 8:56 AM
277	As long as they respected me, including my faith, I would definitely be open to marrying a non-Christian. One of my best friends (my ex-wife) has done so, and they are very happy.	May 14, 2012 3:59 AM
278	I agree with two statements. There are not many Christian men around. Especially where I live. And certainly not many in churches. You do wonder where the right one will come from	May 13, 2012 11:53 PM
279	i married twice before to non-Christians... with dreadful consequences.	May 13, 2012 3:35 PM
280	Sometimes I worry that if someone offered me the chance of family and marriage, but they were a non-Christian, I might be tempted to compromise on my faith.	May 13, 2012 1:23 PM
281	But I might if I knew the The Lord was calling me to marry someone who wasn't a Christian	May 12, 2012 1:15 PM
282	Oh wouldn,t that be a miracle to marry successfully an equal Christian...do we want too much??? is it an impossible dream?	May 12, 2012 9:02 AM
283	I think it would be very unlikely that i would marry a non-Christian, I think that is why I have been single for so long as there don't seem to be many eligible ones around where I live.	May 12, 2012 8:44 AM
284	It's too late, never, as I waited this far for that Godly Man already! Godly Men keep appealing to me, Real ones!	May 12, 2012 5:39 AM
285	It'd be extremely difficult to date a non-Christian, as it is difficult enough dealing with my non-believing family. However there seems to be very few Christians out there who seem suitable for me or deem me acceptable in their eyes. If it ever happened, they would need to respect my faith and Christian values (i.e. no sex before marriage), so that I would be free to live out my faith.	May 11, 2012 2:12 PM
286	Although if God made it super clear that the partner was the right one I would start dating him but wouldn't marry him unless he knew Jesus	May 11, 2012 2:05 PM
287	Christian guys never are interested in me. They are very fussy because they are spoilt for choice. Non chistian guys are less fussy and give me a chance!	May 11, 2012 2:01 PM
288	I don't think that it is wrong to marry a non-Christian. But from a male POV there are still a lot of women available who are Christians - when I am ready to marry again.	May 11, 2012 9:32 AM
289	my late husband was a non christian but his death was a celebration of life and i am assured that he is in heaven , i think that so long as they are happy for you to attend its ok.	May 11, 2012 5:35 AM
290	It's a non-starter. It is unfaithful to God, and self-indulgent. I'd be rejecting him in favour of my desires.	May 10, 2012 2:29 PM
291	I have thought about this a lot. I don't think I would like to marry a non-	May 10, 2012 12:33 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

	Christian, but I have learnt never to say never, because if put in that situation, I can imagine it would be very easy to say yes.
292	As i said earlier - i cannot share my life with someone who doesn't understand what makes me tick and can help me with that. I have seen too many struggles in couples who are not both Christians.	May 10, 2012 12:02 PM
293	despite temptation i know it is not Gods plan	May 10, 2012 7:18 AM
294	A potential non-Christian spouse would need to be at least open to and sympathetic to the faith, and also to having children. It must be recognised that sometimes that meeting / marrying a non-Christian can actually be God's way of bringing that particular person to the faith.	May 10, 2012 4:06 AM
295	Never!	May 10, 2012 2:04 AM
296	I did marry a non-Christian and it was the biggest mistake of my life...but I have three beautiful children...so I couldn't wish to undo it, but I wouldn't want to repeat it.	May 9, 2012 4:06 AM
297	My faith is so crucial to me and the reason that I live so spending my life with someone who isn't interested in God just wouldn't work (not that I'm not tempted to at times though!)	May 8, 2012 1:50 PM
298	Yes, I have been in a relationship with a non-Christian that was a friend for a couple years then all of a sudden we ended up realizing how much we were smitten with each other and the magnetism is beyond powerful. We have the emotional tie through friendship, the physical wowowow but no the spiritual as he follows another religion all together. It's unrequited love and devastatingly sad as he is all I think about but I can't be with a non believer.	May 8, 2012 12:32 PM
299	I have not always lived my Christian life the way I should, hence the reason I am a single parent (one child). I would never go down that route again. Also, my daughter is being brought up to know Jesus. I would never compromise that by having a relationship with someone who did not have a real and deep faith in Christ.	May 8, 2012 11:44 AM
300	Was married for 10 years to a non-Christian - he was a wife beater and that is why I want to marry a Christian. I do not believe in divorce but I had to in the end because it became serious.	May 8, 2012 10:12 AM
301	Married non Christian in the past would prefer a supportive partner this time prefer Christian	May 8, 2012 6:15 AM
302	do not be yoked with the unbeliever.	May 7, 2012 3:32 PM
303	I think if your faith is important to you it's impractical to marry someone who doesn't share it because it shapes so much of how you live your life	May 7, 2012 1:21 PM
304	No, absolutely not, but I can totally see why people do!	May 7, 2012 11:31 AM
305	As noted previously, I would need to be sure they are at least sympathetic to my Christian views and values and accepted them as an essential part of my life. I would also be praying hard that they were saved before I did actually marry them.	May 7, 2012 11:18 AM
306	I have been in a non Christian marriage, it is difficult to maintain & enable your partner to understand, he did not always support my involvement	May 7, 2012 9:31 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

307	I do believe in the concept of flirt to convert! Statistically, the ratio of single christian men to single christian women is in the favour of the men, certainly in London, which does not give us girls much choice. I am strong enough in my own faith to deal with being married to someone who isn't a christian when I meet them, but I also believe in the power of prayer and there are probably many guys out there who could be saved, if only someone would take the time to pray for them. I would have the faith that that person would come to Christ but peace if they didn't.	May 7, 2012 8:36 AM
308	All the non Christian men I have been out with want sex very quickly it doesn't work	May 7, 2012 8:29 AM
309	I was in a relationship with a non-christian when i first became a christian and it was due to a having a different world view that we seperated, as we got on very well in many ways	May 7, 2012 7:41 AM
310	I don't know how life will turn out. I'm not willing to place boundaries on the plans God has for me. However I don't believe that God would choose a life partner for me that would undermine my relationship with Him.	May 7, 2012 5:11 AM
311	I was once married to non Christian and this was v. difficult	May 7, 2012 1:56 AM
312	It's unscriptural, tempting as it may be	May 7, 2012 12:54 AM
313	Having dated people that are not sympathetic I would have to married/date someone who does have some understanding of faith	May 6, 2012 6:16 PM
314	I have had oportunities to date non christiam women but the idea terrifies me.	May 6, 2012 3:46 PM
315	This is definitely my intention having had previous relationships with non-Christians in a time in my life I wasn't going to church	May 6, 2012 2:12 PM
316	I see marriage as a sacrament so the other person would have to have an element of religiosity about them in order to undergo the sacrament without hypocrisy. They could, however, be a nominal Christian and regular church attendance would not be a requirement on which I would insist.	May 6, 2012 1:45 PM
317	Previously married to a non-christian, but have learned that God wants me to be in a relationship with someone who shares my beliefs.	May 6, 2012 1:00 PM
318	I would definitely want to marry a Christian, but can't be 100% sure that I wouldn't.	May 6, 2012 10:07 AM
319	As above but to respect my faith and I would pray for a 'mission relationship' to come to fruition and that they would come to Christ. I tis very important that I could share all aspects of who I am with the man I marry and for him to understand it and feel it too.	May 6, 2012 8:40 AM
320	I just don't know	May 6, 2012 6:02 AM
321	at one time i used to be so certain i will marry only a christian but as life has gone on and it gets harder to meet christian men i feel i have to open the gates wider	May 6, 2012 3:54 AM
322	I've been trying to only date Christians recently and am not looking to date any non-Christians. I have to say I've had more success with meeting & dating non-Christians in the past than I have Christians.	May 5, 2012 4:57 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

323	ticked the option closest to beliefs however, realize there could be issues marrying a non Christian	May 5, 2012 3:46 PM
324	As long as he is not a muslim. If he is genuinely in love & committed, he may eventually be converted by His grace.	May 5, 2012 3:35 PM
325	My ex-husband became a Christian before I married him and then completely fell away from it and was violent towards me. I wouldn't even date a non-Christian	May 5, 2012 3:30 PM
326	I'm referring more to a platonic relationship - this survey doesn't seem to take into account one's sexuality...	May 5, 2012 3:22 PM
327	I don't mind maring a christian or none christian; but I want it to be God's will for me to mary the right man..	May 5, 2012 2:40 PM
328	I have tried relationships with non christians but know that there is no future as I do not want to marry a non christian. However, I live in a small island are there are very few single christian men my age	May 5, 2012 11:24 AM
329	but probably not someone of a different faith (muslim, hindu). But an agnostic or atheist or those who say they are non Christians because they are put off by the church and organised religion might possibly, if Jesus returned tomorrow, recognise Him way before a lot of Christians...because the only reason they are non Christians is because what they see in the church overall is not Jesus but man. It all depends on the circumstances as I know it can be fatal to insist on someone converting and it is best to marry them first and let God do some of the work. I long to have a Christian husband and yet so many people I know are currently outside the church. I myself might be had I not had my current church over the years, and had I not read Philip Yancey and Adrian Plass/	May 5, 2012 10:15 AM
330	I would prefer to meet a Christian, but as the fourth one says, there have to be single christians available.	May 5, 2012 9:27 AM
331	Only if God directed and with support of mature christians.	May 5, 2012 9:12 AM
332	I almost answered with the penultimate option, but my faith and certainty about its importance just prevails at the moment - though I cannot say that is absolute and forever; it may depend on who I meet: they would definitely need to be sympathetic to my faith. All three options are therefore ones I could have gone with, but I think the first is marginally the most honest.	May 5, 2012 9:01 AM
333	I wouldn't	May 5, 2012 5:38 AM
334	I really don't want to be single, but I also know I don't want to marry a non Christian. I have given a few close friends permission to hold me accountable on this and to give me a very hard time if they see me slip.	May 5, 2012 1:38 AM
335	Its very difficult and something I have just recently been challenged with. In all other respects they ticked the boxes apart from this one major area!	May 4, 2012 5:53 PM
336	Previously i would have only wanted to marry a christian as my faith is very imp. I had always wanted children but found it difficult meeting a christian and I am now 50 years old still trusting God for my partner.	May 4, 2012 4:57 PM
337	I was married to a non christian and it was devastating and a huge mistake I would NEVER marry a non christian again.I have seen non christians and	May 4, 2012 3:21 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

	even other faiths on christian websites and this appals me. It was never meant to be married to a non christian and I would not join a website that allowed this or any other non biblical prnciples. My ex-husband advertises on christian websites and has had numerous affairs, lied on his profile and promotes sex before marriage but has never been removed from websites for his untruthfulness and no checks are made of truthfulness of candidates which is wrong. If you are going to run such a site there are lots of hoaxes and untruthful people who need to be prevented from accessing the sites and trying to approach vulnerable singles, I have been on the receiving end of these hoaxes and it is incredibly upsetting and hurtful. if you cannot protect your truthful clients and listen to their concerns then you shoul not open such a site. Costs also need to be kept low as single people with small children and no earnings dont stand a chance of paying and meeting a life partner.
338	Difficult - I have always been taught it is wrong and I don't think it is biblical. The best relationship I have ever had was with a non-Christian, but I ended it for the above reasons and am still not sure I did the right thing.	May 4, 2012 2:46 PM
339	I like a man whom can join me to sing hymns and praises together because I love to sing to praise my Lord. Through all the changing scenes of life, In trouble and in joy, the praises of my God shall still, my heart and tongue employ	May 4, 2012 1:44 PM
340	I would like to say I would not, but this may not be realistic.	May 4, 2012 1:36 PM
341	I would like to tick no i can't see that I would ever marry a non-Christitan because I don't think it's right but I can't because all my friends who believed that have given up and chosen a non-christian, despite saying they never would, so who knows? Maybe I'd give up my ideals for the sake of not being single.	May 4, 2012 1:18 PM
342	I would hope I could help them find the Lord.	May 4, 2012 1:06 PM
343	I think I would try very hard to avoid a relationship with a non-Christian, been there, it didn't work out.	May 4, 2012 1:02 PM
344	I believe not marrying a non-Christian is consistent with New Testament teaching	May 4, 2012 12:55 PM
345	I think my previous experience with my ex-husband means I will try to marry someone who is an active Christian	May 4, 2012 12:39 PM
346	I really see this as more a non Christian would probably not want to marry me	May 4, 2012 12:38 PM
347	although tempting because of a lack of christians, i know it would not be beneficial to my life and actually hinder Gods plan for me	May 4, 2012 11:43 AM
348	I will love that both take part in faith.....	May 4, 2012 11:15 AM
349	I don't see why God would put me with someone who didn't love Him.	May 4, 2012 8:58 AM
350	It's very difficult to meet Christian men. There's far more christian women than men. Therefore if you want to be with someone you have to consider going out with a non christian.	May 4, 2012 8:25 AM
351	A specific 'yes' from the Lord	May 4, 2012 7:53 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

352	Part of this depends on one's definition of 'Christian'... I suspect my definition is broader than some people's...	May 4, 2012 5:14 AM
353	Christian friends married to non Christian husbands are a zillion times more fulfilled and happy than single Christians	May 4, 2012 5:09 AM
354	I appreciate it's easy to say whilst I haven't met anyone. I believe God wants be to be with a Christian	May 4, 2012 3:47 AM
355	I have been married twice to non-christians & it does'nt work	May 4, 2012 2:19 AM
356	In the past this would have been my automatic response - but now I am not so sure !!	May 3, 2012 6:33 PM
357	It impossible to rule this out completely though I think it unlikely.	May 3, 2012 3:28 PM
358	I would have more difficulty marrying a fundamentalist Christian (or any sort of fundamentalist, for that matter) than someone of another faith or none.	May 3, 2012 2:43 PM
359	My non-Christian brother married a Christian for which I was very grateful. He did make a decision for Christ although he tries to distance himself these days through lack of a church he fet comfortable with close by. (He became a Christian in my church which is 30 miles from his home.)	May 3, 2012 1:39 PM
360	But marrying a Christian does not guarantee a good marriage	May 3, 2012 1:29 PM
361	I would not want to marry a non-Christian but I don't think I could say I never would. In the past I have got involved with someone who was not a Christian	May 3, 2012 1:08 PM
362	The older I get the more understanding I have gained why someone would marry outside their faith. I do not believe this is God's best for my life but there are increasingly times when the strengh of my desire to have a husband and family tempts me to believe a non-christian partner would be better than being alone. I have been down that road in the past though and it definitely makes you compromise in your faith, so I don't want to go there.	May 3, 2012 1:00 PM
363	I don't believe this would be God's best for me.... and yet, it is probably the reason I remain single, as the market is so small...	May 3, 2012 12:17 PM
364	They would need to understand my previous involvement in the Church and the impact that it had on me.	May 3, 2012 11:38 AM
365	I might have done 5 years ago but am not interested now. I am quite happy with my life as it is.	May 3, 2012 10:57 AM
366	i'M NOT REALLY LOOKING FOR A PARTNER BUT WOULD PREFER SOMEONE WITH WHOM i CAN SHARE WHAT IS THE MOST IMPORTANT PART OF MY LIFE.	May 3, 2012 10:15 AM
367	I do occasionally think about this because marrying a christian isn't a guarantee that everything is going to go well - not all christians behave as they should do within the marriage - It's a difficult one - I think i might find it difficult not to talk about Jesus to him and, although I wouldn't be pushy, i'm not sure if it would make me too concerned and worried	May 3, 2012 10:03 AM
368	They would have to be very special!	May 3, 2012 8:47 AM
369	Once I would have said no to this, but I have actually found some non-	May 3, 2012 7:28 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

	Christian ladies to be more sympathetic as people than some in church, where I have felt less accepted at times.
370	The maths just don't add up = let alone in the village where I live, NATIONALLY!! If the Church is preaching it has to be two Christians, the Church needs to get bringing men in !!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!	May 3, 2012 6:48 AM
371	I think it would depend.eg A thinking individual who is a follower of Hinduism or Buddhism would be very interesting. Alsoa serious Humanist.. By the way I dont believe God has a plan for anyone except to be as comapssionate as one can be.	May 3, 2012 5:03 AM
372	I'd rather be alone than compromise with the world on this.	May 3, 2012 4:21 AM
373	has een hard saying no too feelings and freindships with non christians as u put it, when you know ther is a great connection and bond and pesinoality that work and you fancy them and rekon they you, to walk away and say no or stop them is really hard when it feels more natula than at church and appens realy at church, there is litte oportutiy for spendin time in a relaxed manner that deveps frendship. it happs much more often out of church.	May 3, 2012 2:21 AM
374	They would at least have to be seriously thinking about becoming one. Even then I would like to wait until they actually have before marrying.	May 3, 2012 2:17 AM
375	I would rather marry a strong Christian so that we could support and encourage each other in our faith. I personally know of 2 men who married non-Christians, their wives are now both Christians too so I wouldn't say I think marrying a non-Christian is always wrong.	May 2, 2012 9:33 PM
376	never again. There is a special kind of loneliness that only christians married to non christians can ever experience, like going to midnight mass on christmas eve alone or sitting at your daughter's christening alone. that is why he asked us not to. Not because he is so hard and unloving but because he never wanted us to know that kind of sadness.	May 2, 2012 5:58 PM
377	It would be a never to be repeated experience and strongly advise young people contemplating marrying a non christian not to do it. Scripture is very clear about this.	May 2, 2012 4:17 PM
378	There is no way I would be willing to share my life, my house and my bed with an unbeliever!	May 2, 2012 4:12 PM
379	I would not marry somebody of another faith (Jewish/Muslim/Buddhist) and I would not marry an agnostic or atheist. For a start, if I married it would have to be in a church in front of God and they wouldn't have the same respect for the vows that I would.	May 2, 2012 4:12 PM
380	I can't see me going down that road to be honest. Because I feel spiritually off the deep end some times, I believe it would be grossly unfair to expect someone who finds the concept alien, to bear with me in that. An ex girlfriend lost their faith (which possibly was a crutch to them) while I was dating them. I tried to hold all the different elements oif my life together and found it practically choked the life out of me. So you can understand my reluctance.	May 2, 2012 4:07 PM
381	I would like to say oh a definate no, but I don't know. I don't thing so as God is such a big part of me and would want to share that with someone.	May 2, 2012 3:38 PM
382	I think that Christians should be open to people but should also be clear	May 2, 2012 3:31 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

about the risks of marrying non-Christians. Potential problems outweigh the benefits. However, avoidance means that Christians can be too exclusive and can put up barriers instead of communicating with others. Just get to know them!

383	hmmmm tricky I fluctuate from definitely needs to be a christian to well if they were supportive in my faith... bit ultimately everyone wants the perfect scenario where you can share the most important thing to you. However I would also add most of the people I have dated have been non christian due to the distinct lack of male christians	May 2, 2012 3:11 PM
384	Just that the answer I have given has made me count the cost of following Christ more than any other single thing	May 2, 2012 2:54 PM
385	It is highly unlikely, and if I did marry a non-Christian I would probably spend my life trying to convert them to Christianity.	May 2, 2012 2:49 PM
386	i have been out on dates with non-christians,but have found talking to them ,that they don,t want a woman who won,t have sex outside marriage.	May 2, 2012 2:44 PM
387	The church and Christians do not help by introducing singles. Other cultures, Jews, Mediterraneans,Asian,Africans help one another. The British and Church do not help.	May 2, 2012 2:42 PM
388	I would rather be at peace with myself and God than compromised. I cannot change anyone and marrying to avoid being single will only cause pain in the long run. I do not think its good to go from one relationship to another looking for perfection in someone else. If you have been married before what makes a marriage end? is the end necessarily the end?	May 2, 2012 2:41 PM
389	I agree that the choice locally is very limited	May 2, 2012 2:28 PM
390	I might if they had been Christian in there youth and fallen away.	May 2, 2012 1:49 PM
391	Been there. It does not work	May 2, 2012 1:19 PM
392	As hard as it is to wait and trust God that he has the best partner for me in his perfect timing, it has crossed my mind whether to date a non-believer because there are many more men available and choice, and who I would like. But my faith is too important and I know God wants me to be with a lovely Christian male so I have to cling on and pray God meets my desires asap.	May 2, 2012 1:10 PM
393	I did. But he was anti.So not sure if I would want to do it again.	May 2, 2012 1:04 PM
394	In an ideal world, I would want to marry a non-Christian and a person's lack of faith is something that has stopped me asking people out on dates in the past.	May 2, 2012 1:00 PM
395	I am using this website primarily to make new friends (male and female) but am open to the possibility that I may meet a female I would like to marry.	May 2, 2012 12:41 PM
396	I did marry a non christian and ended up divorced due to not seeing eye to eye on many issues - I should have known better!	May 2, 2012 12:34 PM
397	I have waited a long time I do no really wish to marry a non-Christian and doubt I will.	May 2, 2012 12:22 PM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

398	I wish the church would stop lumping Christians and non Christians into those two catagories. Each is a person who may or may not be open sympathetic to faith. Drawing lines to create an 'us and them' is ridiculous and unhelpful in terms of all of us journeying with God. Ech relationship needs to be analysed by those involved and supported by the church. Churches tend to 'drop' people who don't play by the 'rules'. How many more people would come to faith if church took befriending non christians in the dating world seriously. There are ore dynamic ways to think and support the individuals and where they are in their faith.	May 2, 2012 12:07 PM
399	I have enough experience now to know that marrying a non-Christian would not be the best plan for me. I know that if I re-marry, I would value walking alongside my husband in our faith together, whilst enjoying our differences. I have no true objection for the plan being different for other Christians, however, but I would be anxious that they felt it was absolutely right for them, that they felt supported in their decision, and that this was not a 'last resort'	May 2, 2012 11:44 AM
400	I was married to a non-Christian and as my faith grew it became difficult for my husband to understand it.	May 2, 2012 11:41 AM
401	I would but there would be issues	May 2, 2012 11:15 AM
402	My brain would tempt me to think it's ok to marry a non Christian, but if my faith is as strong as it should be, I know that it is not God's will... or is it? If I do fall in love with a non Christian, they would need to understand that my priority will always be God.	May 2, 2012 10:59 AM
403	My husband was not a Christian when we married and that took me away from God not my husband my own wanting to be with him and not with God	May 2, 2012 10:37 AM
404	i wNT TO MEET THE PERSON god wants me to share my life with but i am afraid to get married in case they leave n take half of what i own	May 2, 2012 10:35 AM
405	I've changed on this recently, so that I would be more open to marrying a non-Christian.	May 2, 2012 10:33 AM
406	You never know what life is going to throw at you, and God works in mysterious ways. Check out who married who in the Bible!	May 2, 2012 10:31 AM
407	I generally think it is better to marry another Christian as it is such a big part of one's life. However, I think people in the olden days were generally less fussy as there was less choice and people just married whoever was available for security.	May 2, 2012 10:30 AM
408	If one marries a non Christian one fall down and away from God. One does not usually succeed in bringing the non-Christian to a saving faith and knowledge of the one true and living God.	May 2, 2012 10:29 AM
409	The thought has crossed my mind, but I prefer to look for a Christian as I believe they may more trustworthy	May 2, 2012 10:25 AM
410	Although I would find this difficult because I have a Reader ministry in the church and my faith plays such a huge part in my life.	May 2, 2012 10:10 AM
411	I have had non Christian boyfriends in the past, and my faith has always been the reason they have broken up with me. We have had such different outlooks on life and our futures that it wasn't possible to reconcile those differences. Having a God-centred marriage is now high on my agenda!	May 2, 2012 10:03 AM

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

412	I broke up with someone because they were not a Christian, but now I wonder if in the future I would make the same choice. I always felt strongly that I wanted to be with a Christian but as time goes on I am more open to other ideas...	May 2, 2012 9:46 AM
413	I hope I wouldn't but as I get older I think the temptation would be greater.	May 2, 2012 9:44 AM
414	My ex-husband was a non-Christian, so was I when we married, I want to marry someone who shares my faith, I don't want to be single in my faith again, it was very hard.	May 2, 2012 9:37 AM
415	I was previously married to a non christian who was supportive in my beliefs and made lots of friends through my involvement at church, so I don't see being with a non christian a problem as long as they were not against my beliefs.	May 2, 2012 9:22 AM
416	I have often struggled with the temptation to date non-christians, as christian ment I have known have not been willing to put themselves on the line and try instigate a relationship, but non-christian men have. I have had to rind myself though that I could not see myself ever marrying a non-christian and so dating one would be pointless	May 2, 2012 8:30 AM
417	I was taught that it is wrong to marry a non christian and I would find it hard to marry someone who I wouldn't be able to talk about theirs and my faith. Its such an intrinsic part of who I am. However I have heard of people who have married non christians and their partners have become Christians and one friend of mine has a husband who is more supportive about her faith than many of my Christian friends Christian husbands are	May 2, 2012 8:27 AM
418	I don't want to seem so rigid on this but I know from experience that if you have Jesus in your life then it is natural that you would want someone who you will be most intimate with to be also. It goes without saying really.	May 2, 2012 8:17 AM
419	I tried this once and discovered the hard way why God does not want you to be yoked to an unbeliever.	May 2, 2012 8:09 AM
420	I can't fully share my life, decisions, prayer, finances with a non Christian so no, I wouldn't.	May 2, 2012 7:56 AM
421	I'm not strict on not marrying a christian, but it would seem odd, and i would feel guilty, or that I was letting my christian friends down. I've also realised that because i've been very much part of the church, it's affected my culture, and so I feel most comfortable socialising with christians - i'm a bit annoyed about that!!	May 2, 2012 7:53 AM
422	It looks like an increasingly likely option - especially as the Christian women I've approached on this site (who very rarely reply to my e-mails), in church and at other events are so ignorant, ill-mannered and arrogant.	May 2, 2012 7:51 AM
423	Should a non Christian woman who was right for me in every respect (apart from faith) take an interest in me it would put me to the greatest test of my faith.	May 2, 2012 7:47 AM
424	B	May 2, 2012 7:44 AM
425	I might if I couldn't find another Christian, but I'd rather marry a Christian	May 2, 2012 7:41 AM
426	Not only sympathetic, but supportive of me in my faith. I've heard people	May 2, 2012 7:29 AM marry Christians who have abused them... and some of the Christian men I have met have been a nightmare... so I think Jesus wants to save everyone, and as long as the person I'm with supports me in my faith it could be ok - requires a lot of prayer though!!!!

Page 26, Q1. Could there be any circumstances in which you would marry a non-Christian?

427	Who knows what would be I store if you married a non Christian. But in all things honesty up front to my commitment to god and church	May 2, 2012 7:05 AM
428	I had a relationship with a non christian for approx two years, but it didnt work out. He resented my Church life and I couldnt make him understand my love for Jesus. I never felt I could marry him.	May 2, 2012 7:03 AM
429	There are not many available christian men and my minister was against my marrying my very keen last partner, even tho he came to church with me, as he was not a Christian!	May 2, 2012 7:00 AM
430	No. Would rather just lie in he road and wait for an artictulated lorry...	May 2, 2012 6:56 AM
431	i tend to think that the lady i was to marry would have a stronger faith than I have and would encourage me (which is the wrong way round)	May 2, 2012 6:45 AM
432	my dad is not nominally christian but open to it and it has not affected my faith at all. i would only marry a non-christian if they were open to bringing our children up as christians	May 2, 2012 6:41 AM
433	If they are goldly, accept that my faith is important to me, and support me, then that would be great. God is mighty to save after all.	May 2, 2012 6:26 AM
434	It's difficult, I find a lot of single women in the church are overly timid, have no real idea who they are and aren't the kind of strong woman I would like to be with. I meet far more of these people outside of the church, so it does make it difficult. Ideally, I'd love to be with a Christian, I think that its right by God, but it's exceptionally tough.	May 2, 2012 6:23 AM
435	I don't wish to but I might get to a certain age whereby I'm at my wits end and not prepared to face extra restrictions about who I marry because I'm Christian	May 2, 2012 6:12 AM
436	Ideally I would like to marry a Christian but have reached the stage in life where I think it very unlikely I would meet someone and get married as I have been forced to become used to the single life and have become set in my ways,	Apr 21, 2012 11:25 AM